* There is a place called Oughtibridge near Sheffield. It is mentioned as one of the ancient points of the boundary-line of the manor of Sheffield. Cockwell Hill to Rumbling Clough, to Oakwell, "to a place called Orabridge."—(Gatty's ed. Hunter's Hallamshire, 1869, p. 17.) Perhaps there was a distant or outer bridge. In times when surnames were derived from the accidental circumstances of locality, residence, &c., this one would most likely be adopted by, or given to, persons or families dwelling out at bridge, or over against an outer bridge. The name first occurs in the Hatfield registers in 1567-8, when "Johana Vghtibridge," dau. of Robert Vghtibridge, was buried 15 January. At the court for the manor of Epworth, 10 Oct., 1560, the wife of one Reginald Outbridge was amerced, for that, being a common brewer and baker, she had sold contrary to the assize, and that she "non morem gessit gustatoribus cerevisie." The name of Oughtibridge is found at Dermula. Capt. Newsome, R.E., informs me that, when stationed there, he had frequent dealings with a Mr. Oughtibridge. He had a small property of his own, which he farmed, and also kept a store. He had a tradition that one of his ancestors had been beheaded for some political offence. In 1687, Edmund Oughtibridge, of Hatfield, yeoman, was indicted, at the Doncaster Borough Sessions, for having, on the 3rd Feb., 1637, assaulted, "vi et armis, gladiis, baculis, et culetellis," one Thomas Craven, so that his life was despaired of.

† "Wrapt in linnen contrary to Act for burying in woollen."—Par. Reg.
 § Surrender in Hatfield Court Baron, dated 15 Aug., 1710, from Wm. Oughtibridge, of Hatfield Woodhouse, gent. of lands, &c., to the use of himself and Margaret Parnell, of Doncaster, spinster, "quam, Deo volente, in uxorem ducere intendit." Marriage not registered at Hatfield or Doncaster. 11 Dec., 1728, probate of will of Margaret Oughtibridge, late of Hatfield Woodhouse, was granted to Thomas Parnell.
 ‡ The authority for this is a MS. memorandum on the flyleaf of Abraham de la Pryme's Diary. Baptismal registers at Hatfield are deficient at that date. This Thomas Oughtibridge is stated by Hunter (South Yorkshire i., p. 181.) to have been "a Yorkshire artist of no extraordinary merit, but his engravings are valuable as giving representations of objects no longer existing." A view of Sheffield, taken from Pye-Bank, about 1730, is one of his works.—(Hallamshire, p. 11, note.) He seems to have been also a sculptor, several of the monuments of his connections, in Hatfield Church, appearing to be of his handiwork, and marked with his name on them.
 ¶ Banns of marriage published 23 and 30 Oct. and 6 Nov., 1808, at Hatfield church, but the register is not filled up and signed.
